HOUSE OF LORDS.

PARLIAMENT BILL IN COMMITTEE.

IMPORTANT AMENDMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Tuesday.

The Lord Chancellon took his seat upon the woolsack at a quarter-past four o'clock.

BILLS ADVANCED.

The Commons amendment to the Government of India (Amendment) Bill were considered and agreed to.

The War Charities Bill, the British Ships (Transfor Restroctum) Bill, and the Municipal Savings Banks War Loan Investment Bill were read a third time and passed. PARLIAMENT BILL.

On the motion to go into Committee on the Parliament and Local Elections Bill, Earl GREY asked for an assurance that any conference which was convened to committee the question of electoral reform would be entitled to deal with the subject of proportional representation which, in his opinion, far exceeded in importance any of the questions affecting electoral reforms.

The Marquis of CREWE said that when, on the second reading of the bill, he alluded to the prospect of the suggested conference, his remarks excited ford Salisbury almost to frenzy, although he merely referred to one or two subjects by way of illustration, with which the conference might be expected to deal. He had no doubt whatever that the important subject of proportional representation would necessarily

CARE OF DISABLED SOLDIERS.

The Earl of LICHFIELD called attention to the question of the care of disabled men, in-cluding provision for their health, training, and employment, in accordance with the Nawal and Military War Pensions Act, and asked the Go-comment whether steps were being taken to

The Secret of GOODSYEAR Success. HE notorious Highland highways—Amulree, Applecross, Kenmore, Braemar-Grantown—hold no terrors for the Goodyear All-Weather tyre with its tough diamond tread. It will stand up to the "going" as no other tyre will, records of 10,000 and 15,000 miles being quite common. Every "Goodyear," from the canvas to the tread, is designed to give great wearing qualities, while providing maximum resiliency. Now this question of resiliency is of vital importance to all motorists. For a tyre to be truly economical, it must not only give great milease, but it must enable that mileage to be achieved on a low petrol consumption. The greater a tyre's resiliency, the lower the petrol consumption. That is an axiom. And that also is where "Goodyears" score so heavily, because, owing to the fact that no shoddy or reclaimed rubber, but only new rubber is used in their construction, the resiliency of "Goodyear" tyres is unrivalled. on comba whatever that the important statistics of the state of the conference.

The State of Ireland.

Four months ago there occurred in this country, which, being a part of the United Kingdom, is at war with Germany, and attention of the Government will be Kingdom, is at war with Germany, and occupies in relation to Great Britain a flank position of peculiar strategic importance, a dangerous rebellion. It was inspired by our chief enemy; it was preceded by a German attempt, happily frustrated, to land in Ireland a great quantity of arms and ammunition. The rebellion was suppressed after a week of anarchy which involved great loss of life and great derivation of the Government will be and that of the rising cost of food and other commodities of domestic importance. It is possible, of course, that the matter will be domestic importance, a dangerous rebellion was received by a German attempt, happily frustrated, to land in Ireland a great quantity of arms and ammunition. The rebellion was suppressed after a week of anarchy which involved great loss of life and great destruction of property, with the aid of military forces diverted to this country from England, where they were in training to proceed to the front. Only a small percentage of the arms employed by the rebels were surrendered, and, in the words of the Proclamation issued by the Lords Justices a month after the outbreak, which retained and still retains mastial law in

PREMIER.

It was announced yesterday from Rome and from Salonika that centingents of Italian and Russian troops have been landed at Salonika to fight with the troops under General Sarrail in the Balkans. There were scenes of great enthusiasm at the landing.

The Greek Premier has issued a statement that the presence of the Russians in the Balkans causes no uncasiness to the Greek Government, and he does not consider that any political difficulties will arise. The Russians, he adds, have been brought to Salonika for military reasons, and there can be no question of the internal color of the feat takes one's breath away. RECRUITING IN IRELAND.

It was said there was a block upon recruiting in Ireland. There were gallant Irishmen fighting on every front where the citizens of the Empire were fighting. They had poured out their blood and faced every risk, and be did not believe their countrymen intended those Irish battalions to be recruited from London and Glasgow by Englishmen and Scotchmen. These men were a pledge of the possibilities between this country and Ireland, and they must not be frustrated. It was the business of every man who loved the Empire and his own country to see that they were not frustrated. He asked Englishmen to take account in a generous spirit of one of the noblest acts in politics—the act of Mr. John Redmond. He (Mr. Duke) always felt a tendency to refer to him as the right hom, and learned gentleman. He koped the day would not be far distant when he would receive that title which he desserved. Some Irishmen took a somewhat inconsistent attitude. They said, "Here was this British Government, and here were the Nationalist members of Parliament who had not the capacity nor the willingness to carry through that settlement." They could not have it both ways. After all, for a good part of the 100 years since O'Connell's time, though the standard of Constitutional reform might have wavered, and its march might have appeared to flag, there had been from geheration to generation among sober-minded Irishmen the domand for Constitutional reform when had length reached the less active minds of his fellow-countrymen. Unhappy events had frustrated the policy of Constitutional reform when had spent their labour, and some of them more than their labour, and some of them more than their labour, and some of them more than their labour, and some of them had spent their labou of public affairs could fail to look back with a damiration and gratitude as a patrictic citizen to the course taken by Mr. Redmond, and the way in which the hon, and learned member was aupported by those who had followed him for so many years. (Cheers.) Mr. O'Connor had rereferred to it as an event which would stand out in history. He was a quite right; but it was something more. It was not a mere picturesque effect. Every man who had watched Irish affairs and studied Irish history knew that there was a fund of generosity and courage which you could draw upon in Ireland. And that generosity and courage reached a level which would be an eternal honour to Irishmen who had been members of that House when the member for Waterford an anounced there on the eve of the outbreak of war, when he reiterated it at the time of the rebellion, and when he, in a day of disappoint ment which must have been bitter to him, once more, re-affirmed the determination of Irishmen which must have been bitter to kim, once more, re-affirmed the determination of Irishmen which must have been bitter to kim, once made that night, after all the sad events of the men of this country in seeing this war to a successful conclusion. (Cheers.) He had no doubt that the tone of the speeches which had been made that night, after all the sad events of the spat few months, contained something of hope.

RECRUITING IN IRELAND.

It was said there was a block upon recruiting in Ireland. There were gallant Irishmen fighting on every front where the citizens of the Empire were fighting. They had poured out their blood and faced every risk, and he did not believe their countrymen intended those Irish battalions to be recruited from London and Gisagow by Englishmen and Scotchmen. These men were a pledge of the possibilities between this country and irreland, and they must not be live their country and the Allies had to do was to march teadily, and they work to be invested. It was the business of every man who loved the Empire and his own country to the prest, stances that had occurred—but which I do not think I ought to give to the House—that it would probably be necessary that a warning should be given. I gather from the question which is put to me that the warning which was then spoken of to me in conversation as a thing which might be necessary is the warning to which the question of my hon. friend refers.

Mr. BCANLAN—May I ask the right hon. gentleman to state to the House specifically whether newspaper editors in Ireland have been warned that they are not entitled to criticise the government of Ireland?

Mr. DUKE—To that question the answer is "No." The warning which has been given to them is as to the publication which is likely to produce disaffection—

An IRISH MEMBER—Good old days.

Mr. DUKE (continuing)—And effends against the terms of the Defence of the Realm Regulations.

Mr. SCANLAN—Can the right hon. gentleman point to a single provision under the Defence of the Realm Regulations which prevents newspaper editors from criticising the Government of any department of it?

Mr. DUKE—I have not the Regulations before me, but that there are provisions which prohibit the publication of matters which tend to excite disaffection I am perfectly sure.

Mr. SCANLAN—Is the right hon. gentleman aware that when the Defence of the Realm Regulations relative to the conduct of the Press were under discussion in the House the late thome Secretary stated that newspapers would be free to criticise the Government?

GREEK PREMIER'S STATEMENT. THE PRESENCE OF THE RUSSIANS.

ATHENS, Aug. 1 (DELAYED Premier, has issued a statem Press to the effect that there presence of Russian troops in the Balkans, and considers as unfounded apprehensions felt in certain quarters that political difficulties may arise. The Russian troops, M. Zaimis adds, have been brought to Saloniks for military reasons, and there can be no question of any infringement of the sovereignty of Greece in Macedonia. The presence of the Russians on the Balkan front is calculated to strengthen the moral of the Serbians, in view of the racial ties uniting the two nations. M. Zaimis denies that 'be Russians will be sent as far as Mount Athoa. With reference to the dislocation of the Greek forces remaining in Macedonia, M. Zaimis carplains that this has been done atmost for technical reasons, with a view to facilitating the Allies 'operations in the occupied territories.

IMPORTANCE OF ITALIAN LANDING.

CREUTER'S TELEGRAM.)

ROME, TURSDAY.

Commenting on the landing of Italian soldiers at Salonika, the Messagero calls attention to the military and political importance of the operation, which, it says, will mean a considerable reinforcement to the armies under General Sarrai, at the same time affirming the principle of a single front, and proving that the political and military solidarity of Italy with the Antents against Germany is not fettered or limited in any way. The Messagero adds that the national conscience will greet with satisfaction the official announcement of Italy's co-operation at Salonika, which must be looked upon as a prelude to events which are bound to define the position of Italy with regard to Germany, as demanded by Italy's interests and dignity. The Messagero believes that one of the results of the Italian landing will be a declaration of war against Germany. General Sairail, the journal continues, will not be long in driving the Bulgars or Germans beyond Serbia, and in inflicting a powerful blow against the ill-knit bloc of the enemy.

FEELING IN ATHENS.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM.)
ATHENS, Tuesday. The news of the resistance offered to the Bulgars at the fort of Phoapetra, and in the district where Colonel Christodoulou, replacing the commander of the army corps who was on leave, opposed the Bulgarian advance, and even called out the reserves for the protection of the town of Serres, is greatly exercising the public mind in Athens. It is realised here that the country is now reaping the fruits of the Scouloudis-Gounaria policy. The Germano-Bulgar written guarantees of Greece's integrity, which are officially announced to-day, are insufficient to reassure any true Greek patriot at the moment when the detested Bulgars are invading Greek territory, and the sympathies of the majority of the population go rather to the officers who have resisted the hereditary enemy, in spite of official orders, than to the men who place implicit faith in those who yesterday were the enemies of Greece. The position is growing decidedly serious, and there are signs of increasing irritation among the people at the policy of the late Cabinet, which placed the country in its present plight. The elections will now inevitably be postponed, and the only reassuring factor in the situation is the presence at the head of the Government of a man of such upright character as M. Zaimis. The disquesting news from Macedonia has had a depressing effect on the Bourse, all securities declining, particularly shares of shipping companies.

IRISH POSTMASTER-GENERAL APPOINTED.

Ireland was in 1784 granted larger political powers than she had previously enjoyed, and among other concessions an Irish Postmaster-General was appointed. In return for the receipts on letters from England, which he forwarded to the Treasury, the Irish office was allowed £4,000 a year, which was raised to £8,000 about 1815. The sailing packets remained in charge of the English office. The mails left London at 8 p.m., and arrived at Holyhead at neon on the nevt day but one. They left Holyhead twenty-five minutes later for Howth, and it is surprising to learn that the passage across the Channel took only from five to eight hours. From Howth the packet boat set out for Holyhead at 4 p.m., and the mail coach left for London at midnight. At one time there was a mail service between Liverpool and Kingstown. Un all routes great RECRUITING IN IRELAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

Six,—A great many letters have appeared in your paper lately about the difficulties of recruiting in Ireland, although it must surely be apparent that any direct comprision is out of the question in this country. It would, to say the least, not be advisable. Now, at present, an attempt is being made in Parliament to obtain votes for all soldiers and sailors, especially for those upon active service, and if instead of thus extending the franchise it was restricted to those who thus deserve it, on the principle of one man, one rote, one rife, a great deal of unnecessary trouble would be saved, and it might work extremely well here. Any questions of munition workers and women's suffrage could very well stand over until after the war for a more comprehensive scheme.—Yours, etc. RECRUITING IN IRELAND. August 20th, 1916. RATS IN THE TRENCHES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IZISH TIMES.

Sin,—I wish to draw public attention to the fact that our soldiers in the trenches are suffering from a playing of rate. after a recommendation made to improve conditions was put into effect. In particular the Milford Haven route was always falling into disrepute, both on account of delays and because it paid badly. After 1801 the regular packet boats began to feel the competition of wherries, which were used previously for the carriage of special messangers and special messages. For a short time the Irish post office used them in competition with the regular fact that our soldiers in the trenches are suffering from a plague of rats-rats of enormous size and not in the least afraid of man. When they try to get a sleep they are awakened with these fifthy things crawling over them, and,
turn where they will, there are the rats.

My boy joined the forces at the beginning of the war. bince then he has without a murmur ondured all hardships, run all risks that duty

Steamboats came into use of the DublinHolyhead route in 1818, when a service was instituted by a private company. They quickly took custom from the sailing packets. Smaller receipts from fares caused the contractors of all the "wind-jammers" to seek higher pay, and the Post Office determined to put its own
y steamers on that route and others. In 1821
the Government placed on the Holyhead route two steamers built by Boulton and Watt, and by 1828 the Post Office had six steamers, all of 80 hp., running from Holyhead to Kingstown and Howth, and four, all of 140 hp., running from Liverpool to Kingstown. Steam was introduced in 1824 at Milford, and in 1826
at Liverpool and Portpatrick, and in 1826
at Liverpool and Portpatrick, and in 1826
there were four Post Office steamers plying from Milford and two from Portpatrick. The biggest steamer in these services was of only 327 tons. All those steamboat services were run as a loss, the receipts being considerably less than half the expenditure, and, as usual, the unfortunate Milford boats brought in the least revenue of any. The fares on the Holyhead steamers were a guines for a cabin passenger or a horse, and three guiness for a coach. A curious feature in the history of cross-Channel communications is that in 1671, after the wreck of one of the regular packets, a Dutchbuilt ship was "naturalised," and put on the route as being well suited to the nature of the seas in the Channel. August 21st, 1918. DISCHARGE OF COAL BOATS. TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.
Six,—Seeing a report in this day's Irish ines anent the discharge of ecal boats in the ort of Dublin. A 400 tan boat arrived on The men commenced discharging, and worked until next tide time, when they had to knock of to allow the beat to be put into another dock for the purpose of continuing discharging, and which could not possibly be finished by the men employed until Sunday. Of course, work ceased on Saturday till Monday morning, on which day the boat was finally discharged. The discharging required 20 men, for whom the freightage worked cut at 15s., or 5s. a day, per man, not £1 19s. 10d. for nine hours per man, as stated in your report.—Yours, etc.

COMING EVENT.

DUBLIN'S PENNY POST.

Mr. Percy French's Tour.—Mr. Percy French finishes his popular annual tour of Irish watering places this week and next, in the neighbourhood of Dublin, his first appearance being at Kingstown on Friday evening. One of his new songs, "The Boy o' me Heart," has scored a great success in Portrush and other Northern resorts, where Mr. French has been drawing large audiences this month.

At Cawthorne, near Barnsley, yesterday, Jack Jones (38), minor, of Barnsley, and a nineteen-year-old girl, of the same town, were found unconscious in a lane. A note and three small bottles, which had contained laudanum were found lying near by. Jones died shortly after his admission to hospital, but the young weman recovered.
